

A rather busy fortnight just past will be succeeded by a spell of quiet. Nothing is planned for the coming week except some minor events, and there seems to be a prospect that the main entertaining will be along the line of smaller and less formal affairs than ever before. The two dancing parties of the past week were successful, but no large dances are planned for the immediate future. A number of people are going away for the winter or else have not returned yet from a lengthy stay prolonged from the summer. With the Thanksgiving affairs over, society seems to be taking its breath very carefully before attempting anything in the way of more entertaining.

A Kalamazoo, Mich., paper contains an interesting outline of a forthcoming book written by Mrs. Caroline A. Stanley, formerly of this city, and now of Washington, D. C. The book is entitled "Order No. 11," and the plot is based upon an order issued by General Ewing during the war. The order commanded the concentration of the people of his district in the cities and towns, and the theme of the story deals with this episode. It is said that Mrs. Stanley's book was written and about ready for publication when "The Crisis," by Winston Churchill, appeared. The similarity of the two stories necessitated the re-writing of Mrs. Stanley's, which work is now accomplished.
